Company's Unique Program Sending Many Kids to Camp

NEW YORK—Many underprivileged children went to camp this summer as a result of a unique program instituted by a Pennsylvania manufacturing company.

The company, the Nissina Therapy Corporation of Adamsville, Pa., recruited its sales force of more than 1,000 distributors, dealers and salesmen behind the unusual campaign which it termed "Operation Holiday."

Owen K. Murphy, president of the company, said that each of his dealer and distributor organizations were asked to sponsor at least one or more children in their community for camp.

In describing the plan, Murphy said that each dealer organization set up a Crown Pin Club made up of local salesmen who have done outstanding sales jobs. The primary function of each club is to aid underprivileged children. Each member of the club makes a weekly contribution towards the maintenance of the organization. "Many of our sales personnel have made the club their principal avocation," Murphy said.

"Not only do they innance the youngsters to camp, but they also visit, write, and send them gift parcels," he added. "For many of our people it's like going to camp themselves."

Completely subsidized by its members, each club holds regular meetings to consider and map plans for aiding the underprivileged children of the community. The organizations cooperate closely with local welfare agencies and civic organizations in placing the youngsters in camp.

'Dead' Languages Held Helpful

LOS ANGELES—If you want to put life in your English, then study the so-called "dead" languages.

With 27 per cent of English words derived from Latin and Greek, persons with even a primary knowledge of these languages are able to use English more intelligently and appreciatively, according to Paul Friedlander, professor emeritus of Latin and Greek at the University of California.

"Besides," he says, "it makes reading, writing and talking a lot more fun if you are aware of the family history of a word, such as the Greek origin of 'idea' and 'philosophy,' 'tragedy,' 'comedy,' etc.

"As science grows," Professor Friedlander declares, "so grows the use of Latin and Greek. Many new drugs and medical discoveries bear Greek or Latin names. And since popular magazines and newspapers now consider science a major news field, and since the terminology of psychology is now a household word, the public has more and more need to understand the words being used in order to avoid being confused."

Pen Not Mightier Than Typewriter, It Seems

LOS ANGELES—The pen may be mightier than the sword but the college student who uses it in preference to a typewriter is likely to get knifed when it comes to a term grade.

"In school work, business and private life the typewritten page is becoming the only acceptable form of communication," according to Dr. Allien Robertson Russon, visiting associate professor of office management and business education at the University of California, Los Angeles.

"The world is too big, busy and impatient to decipher bizarre handwritings," she said. "The typewriter has become an appendage of modern man's fingers and the ability to operate one is now as essential as handwriting used to be."

Yet, she said, many high school students who plan to enter college, where they must prepare volumes of term reports, essays and the like, aren't encouraged to take typing classes because they are studying an academic instead of a commercial curriculum.

Keep Kids Safe

CHICAGO—If you must store junior's toys in the garage or basement, advises Toy Guidance Council, keep them as far as possible from your workshop equipment. Tools and machines usually attract youngsters who are not capable of handling them safely. Make sure your tools are out of their reach.

About 97% of Virginia's farm homes are wired for electricity, but studies have shown that nine out of ten houses do not have enough good quality light for normal reading, working, studying, etc.

The situation has been improved by an intensive lighting program conducted in Virginia during the past year, but there is still a long way to go, reports Miss Ruth Jamerson, home economist at VPI.

In the lighting program, conducted by the VPI Agricultural Extension Service and other agencies affiliated with the Virginia Farm and Home Electrification Council, 70 counties held demonstrations for 4-H and house demonstration clubs, civic clubs, and other groups. Twenty-nine counties selected families who wanted to complete light-conditioned homes. Power company representatives and Extension Service personnel advised on wiring, fixtures, and lamps.

Forty-one counties plan to continue the lighting program another year, Miss Jamison said.

Kuala Lumpur, Malaya.- Gen. Lawrence S. Kuter, United States Air Force Pacific chief, had denied reports he had come to discuss military bases with the Malayan Government. He said his one-day stay was "to pay respects and to make calls.

There are about 170,000 employed in Virginia in agriculture, forestry and fishing. The estimated acreage size of the Virginia farm is about 110 acres.

NEWS FOR VETERANS

A 60 per cent cut in administrative costs during the past ten years, totalling more than a quarter of a billion dollars, was reported by the Veterans Administration.

VA said the reduction amounts to $252,132,060 — from $419,945,000 in fiscal 1947 to $166,911,000 in fiscal 1957.

Involved in the reduction, according to VA, are sharp drops in the number of administrative offices and personnel.

Administrative offices have been cut from 1,127 to 345 and administrative personnel, from 112,000 to 28,000 over the 10-year period, VA said.

VA ascribed the reduction to several factors, including reduced work loads, expiration of programs, mechanization of administrative operations, greater experience and productivity of employees, and lower Congressional appropriations.

At the end of World War II, VA had to expand in all directions as quickly as possible to handle the avalanche of applications for benefits that resulted from the greatest mass demobilization of armed forces in the history of the nation. Since then, VA said, the work-load has receded to its current level, requiring fewer administrative offices and considerably less administrative personnel.
